Speaking

"An excellent read." - Simon Monk, Reach Sport
"Worthy of a movie." - Guinness World Records

Overview

Liam Beville is a Limerick-based powerlifter marking 40 years in the competitive sport in 2026 - and remains ranked world number one in his age and weight category at 61 years of age. What sets him apart is that every record, title, and ranking was earned in able-bodied competition - despite living with a permanent disability.

In 1992, his 310 kg conventional deadlift at 75 kg bodyweight in IPF international competition equated to 220 Wilks points - the highest Wilks score ever recorded by an Irish lifter for the deadlift. More than three decades later, that performance remains the benchmark for pound-for-pound deadlifting in Ireland.

His career represents sustained elite performance across four decades, defined not by participation, but by continued world-level ranking and record-setting achievement.

Achievements

- Multiple 'Best Lifter' awards against younger and heavier athletes

- Judge, Active Disability Services Awards (June 2026): Serving as a national judge for the 'Leading by Example' awards in Athlone, recognizing innovation and commitment to inclusive wellbeing across Ireland.
- Powerlifting Coordinator - 2003 Special Olympics World Games (first Games held outside the United States)
- Hosted international delegations in 2002 to demonstrate Ireland's capability to stage elite competition, as Ireland did not have a formal Special Olympics powerlifting team at the time

Historic Milestone

In 1992, weighing 75 kg, Liam deadlifted 310 kg in IPF international competition - matching the legendary Ed Coan at that bodyweight. The lift equated to 220 Wilks points, the highest Wilks score ever achieved by an Irish lifter in the deadlift.

That performance remains unequalled in Irish able-bodied competition at 75 kg and continues to stand as Ireland's definitive pound-for-pound deadlift benchmark more than three decades later.

The weightlifting belt worn for that historic lift is now permanently exhibited in The People's Museum of Limerick, marking its place in the city's sporting history.

Author of Unbroken - The Liam Beville Story, a narrative memoir documenting how a permanently disabled Irish powerlifter competed exclusively in able-bodied sport, established Ireland's highest Wilks-scored deadlift, set a Guinness World Record, and held six world records across four weight divisions. The book examines resilience, longevity, and sustained excellence in elite competition.
